LS,

ScholarshipOwl's approach caught my attention - a marketplace with real scale, real data, and a funnel worth fighting over. The Growth PM role is squarely in territory I know well.

At CO_2ok I owned the full user journey: landing pages, onboarding flows, conversion to paid, retention. A/B testing wasn't a methodology I applied occasionally; it was how we made decisions. I ran tests to validate product improvements and to prove conversion gains to our retail partners. In a bootstrapped startup, shipping "good enough" to get data isn't a philosophy you adopt - it's the only way to survive.

At South Pole I picked up the other side: enterprise SaaS, IAM integrations, UX research, and working across product, engineering, and design to ship under pressure. I've written specs, run user testing cycles, and taken products from zero to revenue in under six months.

The subscription model, funnel diagnostics, experimentation backlogs - these are not abstract to me. The EdTech angle and the Gen Z audience are new territory, but understanding users through discovery is something I've done throughout my career.

I look forward to expanding on this in an interview.

Regards,
Milo de Vries